Refinement's Losing Fight.

There are times in every man's life when the lightning of surprise and the cooling zephyr of relief follow so closely on one another that they confuse his senses and leave him long perplexed. We know of certain gentlemen in Congress, for example, who experienced this strange intermingling of sensations when the Bristow report was submitted to the House of Representatives. We have heard, toothough, of course, no one really believes it-that certain statesmen underwent this same experience when the esteemed Commissioner of Pensions did finally resign.

We have ourselves recently suffered this same experience. With a disregard of the consequences thataster, we glanced carelessly over the fore our eyes had focused on the page they came upon this:

Mrs. Reilly and her daughter stood in the small ball room to receive their guests, the debutante wearing a beautiful gown of white silk net over cream silk, and made in the 1830 style, while her mother wore a gown of black lace and chiffon, and her sister, who was presented two years ago, a gown of net embroidered in pink roses.

Miss Eugenie Havard, of Governors Island, who came to assist in the haunching of this army bud, was also of the receiving party. In the bevy of youthful assistants were Miss Bessle Smith, of Chicago, Miss Helen Chaffee, the school girl daughter of the Lieutenant General of the army, the Misses Gertrude and Harriet Bayne, the Misses Kathline and Marie Weston, all of this city, and Miss Imogene Hoyle, of Fort Myer. Mr. Cooley is now awaiting the arrival of Governor Winthrop in Washington to consult with him in regard to the matter, and while he does not know definitely whether he will go to the slands, he considers it highly probable. It is understood Governor Winthrop ntends introducing a bill in the Porto Rican Legislature to provide for the adoption of the merit system in the insular service. Persons acquainted with the situation are of the opinion that a measure of this nature would find ready favor with the lawmakers of the islands, and little difficulty is expected in bring-
